

Page 1 of 6 · Two Woolly Mittens

Sub-Zero arrives at the snowy post office wearing one mitten and carrying the other. Booklava ties both mittens together so neither can escape into the wind. Outside, parcel labels spin across the ice.

Page 2 of 6 · The Mixed-Up Sleds

Delivery sleds should line up by number, but the gust has turned one card face down. Sub-Zero steadies the runners while Booklava reads the numbers aloud.

Page 3 of 6 · The Shorter Snow Path

Two trails lead around a drift. One has six icy stepping stones; the other has nine. The sun is rising, so Sub-Zero chooses the path with fewer stones and less time in the warm light.

Page 4 of 6 · Ten Bell Deliveries

Each garden gate has a silver bell. Sub-Zero rings once, leaves the matching parcel, and checks the address before sliding onward. Ten bells make a bright song across the snowy village.

Back at the post office, the outgoing shelf is empty. Sub-Zero checks behind the basket and under the scarf. Every parcel has reached the right home. An empty shelf is good news today.

Page 6 of 6 · Fifteen Thank-You Flakes

As the last sled returns, fifteen paper snowflakes flutter from village windows. Each one carries a tiny thank-you picture. Sub-Zero and Booklava hang them above the post desk where they will never melt.

Questions for Sub-Zero and the Snowflake Post

After reading

Why was the empty shelf good news?

Answers (fold under before reading)

Page 1: 2. Two mittens make one warm pair.

Page 2: 9. Nine belongs between eight and ten. The sled line can move again.

Page 4: 10. Ten bells ring for ten careful deliveries.

Page 6: 15. Fifteen snowflakes celebrate a perfectly ordered route.

After reading: An empty outgoing shelf meant every parcel had reached the right home.
